Q: How can I send key strokes to my laptop monitor (and possibly another monitor) on Ubuntu desktop? I want to mimic the "Print Screen" function, taking a screenshot of the current view on my desktop. My main monitor has a built-in keyboard that I want to use to manipulate it and to send the screenshot to the second monitor. I want to be able to do this in a quick, easy, and effective way.

A: I use this to stop my monitor from going to sleep on my Dell monitor: `sleep --verbose 0 > /dev/null &` This makes the monitor stay on, but then sends it a 0 millisecond sleep command which keeps it on. This works great for me on Ubuntu 16.04.02.

1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates generally to a method of manufacturing of semiconductor devices and, more specifically, to a method of manufacture of a phase change memory device.

2. Description of the Related Art Phase change memory devices, such as chalcogenide memory cells, are used for storing information. The information is stored in the chalcogenide cells as a phase change material in the chalcogenide cells. The phase change material can be switched between a crystalline state and an amorphous state, for example, by applying current to the chalcogenide memory cell. The application of the current causes the chalcogenide memory cell to produce heat. The phase change material is generally contained in a chalcogenide material layer between electrodes of the memory cell. The electrodes are made, for example, of platinum (Pt). The heat produced by the application of current to the chalcogenide material causes the phase change material to change state. Resistance of the phase change material varies according to its state. The amount of heat applied to the memory cell is controlled to cause a change in the phase change material. Information is stored in an undetermined state of the phase change material. Due to the amorphous state of the phase change material, heat is required to switch the phase change material to the crystalline state. However, once switched to the crystalline state, the phase change material maintains its crystalline state without the application of heat

NOVAKQ: Corresponding to char (*)(char, int) I'm confused by how to match functions with strings and pointers. I'm trying to match a pointer to a function that takes two parameters and returns one parameter. I can't seem to figure out how to use matching this as an

---

exercise. Is a pointer to a function a new type of type to match? #include char (*foo)(char, int) int main() { char b[1] = {'w'}; char (*p)(char, int) = &foo; char a = *p('x', 3); printf("%c ", a); return 0; } A: I think your confusion comes from the fact you seem to think you are matching one function to another. You aren't. You match a pointer to a function of one specific type to the function of another specific type. The first argument of foo is of type char, which is the first argument of p, which is of type char (*p)(char, int), so your first match is actually a function type for char (*)(char, int). This means that, for a given type, the pointer to that type is the same as the type itself. This might make more sense if the type was defined in a context that matched, say, the following definition of foo: char (*foo)(char, int) = (char(*) (char, int))1; 1 -
